/78 cont./ concerning means of transport by land we do not have any evidence except through the sundry implements which serve for carrying burdens. We can assume from the form of the double bags mentioned in the chapter on weaving that they use their horses and burros to transport loads.

The objects used to transport burdens have already been mentioned in preceding chapters. Among them the most general is the carrying net, which often has a band. By means of it burdens are carried on long trips or the fruits of the harvest are brought in from the fields to the houses, or water is brought, often from a distance, to the dwellings. The carrying net is used in such a way that the band goes across the forehead of the bearer so that the weight of the burden rests on his back (292).

292. See Nord. 2, p. 95.

Nordenskiöld has published a photograph of a woman who is carrying a load in her net (293).

293. Nord. 1, Fig. 87.

Baskets are not used by the Chiriguano and Chané for carrying loads; they are used among these Indians only to store things. Neither is any special band used to carry infants; rather they are carried in a fold of the tipoy.

Only if water is near the house are water jugs sometimes carried on the shoulder without a net, but not on top of the head. This latter appears only in the cases where the Indians are directly influenced by the whites, as happens in the missions (294).

294. Nord. 2, p. 95.

For carrying small amounts of water when traveling, these Indians also use calabashes enlaced with string, or small baked clay vessels /79/ provided with a string or a leather strap, such as, for example, the vessel I.A. 617 shown in Figure 56b.
